

Why study Anthropology at the LSE?

LSE offers a unique opportunity to study the social sciences in a university with a worldwide academic reputation, while enjoying the cultural, social and recreational facilities of one of the world's greatest capital cities.

THE WORLD'S LEADING DEDICATED SOCIAL SCIENCE INSTITUTION

LSE is the only university in the UK specialising in the study of the social sciences. The School offers programmes not only in economics and political science, but also in a wide range of social science subjects taught within 18 academic departments; from anthropology and accounting to social policy and sociology.

Learn from world class anthropologists

In the most recent government audit of research quality, LSE Anthropology was ranked the best Anthropology department in Britain for the quality of our staff's research outputs; the QS World University Rankings places us as the second-best Anthropology department in the world for academic reputation. Whatever your interests, you'll find a member of staff here who will be able to stimulate and challenge your thinking!

The birthplace of anthropology

Anthropology as we know it, with its commitments to ethnographic fieldwork and the participant observation method, has its roots at the LSE. Bronislaw Malinowski studied and taught here, and the department retains a strong commitment to long-term ethnographic fieldwork, bringing its methodological insights into dialogue with a host of contemporary themes, theories and questions. We would love you to be part of the latest chapter in our distinguished history!

LSE Anthropology has come top of all Russell Group Anthropology departments for student satisfaction in both the 2015 and 2016 National Student Surveys. So what makes studying with us so enjoyable? It's partly the passionate, research-led teaching and the opportunity to regularly interact with world-leading anthropologists. But it's also the tremendous sense of community that exists within the department. Whether it's hanging out at our weekly tea parties, travelling around London on one of our course trips, line dancing with your lecturers at the end of term or playing one of the department bands, we'll offer you plenty of opportunities to put the 'social' into 'social anthropology'. Everyone is on first name terms, providing you with a comfortable and friendly environment in which you can thrive.

Exchanges are for one year

Immerse yourself in the year long Academic courses at LSE allowing you to pursue the topics that interest you in extraordinary depth, and draw links between them. It's a highly rewarding approach. Being with us for a year also allows you make the most of the exchange experience: after spending the first term finding your feet, making new friends and getting to know London, you can use the Lent and Summer terms to really take advantage of everything that your time in London has to offer: the friendships, the university societies, the city, and the course.

Exchange students join us for a full academic year. In Britain, this runs from mid-September through to the end of June, so you'll be studying with with us for 9 and a half months. We believe this is by far the most satisfying way to spend time as an exchange student at the LSE

London has an enormous amount to offer you, whatever your interests. As a centre for culture, the arts, government, law and finance, it is unparalleled. LSE is located in central London with many familiar landmarks within easy walking distance: Tate Modern; the National Gallery; the British Museum. Enjoy the Green Spaces. London is one of the world's greenest cities boasting a surprising number of green spaces. See the Royal Parks website for information on activities, events and seasonal highlights royalpark.org.uk. London is a shopper's paradise. Covent Garden, with its famous Piazza and market stalls, is only a few minutes walk from the LSE, and other famous shopping streets a few stops further on the Underground. At the weekends, you can enjoy London's many markets in different parts of the city, selling a wide variety of goods from fresh fruit and vegetables to vintage clothing, crafts and antiques.

Find your way round with the Campus Tour video at lse.ac.uk/campustourvideo

Indebtedness and Aspiration in South Africa
Deborah James

